

NACIMIENTOS

Si bien es cierto que una alta tasa de natalidad (e.g., el número de nacimientos por cada 1,000 habitantes) representa un factor en ciertos aspectos positivos, no se puede pasar por alto que también implica una carga para la economía, ya que tiende a ejercer crecientes presiones en los campos de nutrición, educación, atención médico-social, empleo y productividad. Dichas presiones se canalizan a través de aumentos en el consumo, disminución en el ahorro y, de no controlarse debidamente, puede eruirse como obstáculo formidable al proceso de desarrollo. Esto sin mencionar que parte de la natalidad es fruto de un alto porcentaje de ilegitimidad de nacimiento, lo cual acarrea una triste estela de abandono.

Entre 1963 y 1969 el número de nacimientos inscritos en Costa Rica disminuyó, no sólo con respecto a la población total, sino también en términos absolutos. Tal descenso ocurrió a una tasa promedio de 2.4 por ciento anual. Esto implica una rápida disminución en la tasa de natalidad, de 48.0 por 1,000 habitantes en 1963 a 42.4 en 1966 y a 34.3 en 1969.

La tasa de natalidad fluctuó moderadamente en el orden geográfico, como puede observarse en el siguiente cuadro (1). Todas las provincias muestran un descenso en la tasa de natalidad durante el período 1963-1969. Heredia registra las tasas más bajas, mientras que Guanacaste, Puntarenas y Limón registran las más elevadas, probablemente debido a la alta proporción rural en éstas últimas (2). Como regla general, en zonas rurales la familia es la institución básica a la cual están subordinadas todas las otras instituciones. La familia rural provee educación, empleo y seguridad social, lo cual fortalece el concepto de la tradición y tiende a desarrollar normas de alta fecundidad. Por otro lado, la familia como institución pierde su preponderancia en zonas urbanas, donde la escuela, el mercado de trabajo y otras instituciones económicas y sociales alcanzan un nivel de sistematización más elevado que tiende a romper vínculos tradicionalistas y, por lo tanto, las mencionadas normas de alta fecundidad.

(1) Se toma como denominador en la tasa de natalidad la población estimada al primero de julio de cada año, según los Anuarios Estadísticos correspondientes al período 1963-1969.

(2) Diversos estudios han hallado que la fecundidad rural excede a la fecundidad urbana. Véase por ejemplo a

Aunque la tasa de ilegitimidad (e.g., el porcentaje de nacimientos ilegítimos) de Costa Rica es relativamente baja en comparación con otros países latinoamericanos, ésta se encuentra en franco aumento, albergando la potencialidad de alcanzar proporciones alarmantes en un futuro cercano. Dicha tasa se incrementó de 23.3 por ciento en 1963 a 28.4 por ciento en 1969. A continuación puede analizarse la tasa de ilegitimidad por provincia. Se observa una cierta relación positiva interprovincial entre la tasa de natalidad y la tasa de ilegitimidad, alcanzando ésta últimos niveles mayores de 40 por ciento en las provincias de Guanacaste, Puntarenas y Limón.

La proporción de nacimientos registrados con certificado médico aumentó ininterrumpidamente durante el período en cuestión, de menos de la mitad (45.0 por ciento) en 1963 a más de dos tercios (70.0 por ciento) en 1969, lo cual implica una mayor cobertura en la atención materno-infantil. Dicha mayor cobertura se extendió a través de todo el país, manifestándose más notablemente en San José, Alajuela, Cartago y Heredia, es decir, las provincias que comprenden la Meseta Central.

Con respecto a la atención médica recibida por la madre en el parto, cabe anotar que durante los años 1963-1969 la proporción de nacimientos atendidos por médicos y enfermeras ha aumentado en relación a los atendidos por óbsteras, comadronas y otras formas de atención médica. Estos cambios pueden observarse, por provincia, en los siguientes cuadros.
